Supporting children's sensory Self-Regulation development

How does the sensory environment around us affect our attention and behaviour? How do children manage the sensory information within everyday situations?

Our Supporting children's self-regulation information session is for teachers, assistants and SENCOs who would like to learn more about helping children in their setting to self-regulate. Sensory regulating activities can help children focus and organise their responses to sensory information around them. The session offers practical advice and strategies that you can implement in your educational setting.

These sessions provide an introduction to the topic of self-regulation.

Places are only available to staff from Hertfordshire early years settings or mainstream schools.
